Manager Commentary

Fund commentary

During December 2024, the nReach Capitis IP Worldwide Flexible Fund gained 0.12%, compared to the JSE Top40's 0.8% loss and the sector benchmark's 1.4% gain. The fund's performance tepid compared to previous months as local bonds ran out of steam towards the end of the year. We however remain bullish on local bonds, having reached what we believe to be the top of the local interest rate cycle. The fund will likely continue to benefit from this positioning in coming months.

The fund continues to benefit from exposure to "Low Volatility, High Predictability" assets, having increased its exposure to 25% in December 2025.

During the month the fund adhered to its policy objective and strategy.

Market commentary

December 2024 was a month characterized by continued volatility across global markets, with mixed performance across asset classes. While South African sovereign bonds showed resilience, both local and global equities experienced challenges amid a backdrop of economic uncertainties and shifting investor sentiment.

Global Equity Markets

Global equity markets faced headwinds in December. The S&P 500 declined by 1.18%, following a month of mixed economic data and ongoing concerns about inflation and interest rate policies. The market sentiment was also impacted by uncertainty surrounding the direction of U.S. fiscal policy and the global economic recovery. The MSCI World Index dropped 2.57%, reflecting broader concerns about economic slowdown and tightening monetary policies in major economies.

Despite this, U.S. Treasury bonds saw increased demand due to their perceived safety, as evidenced by the iShares 20+ Year Treasury Bond ETF, which posted a drop of 6.45% in December but faced more stability in December. Long-term bonds remain sensitive to shifts in interest rate expectations, but they still provided a haven for investors seeking to hedge against global uncertainties.

South African Sovereign Bonds

In contrast to global equities, South African sovereign bonds demonstrated a solid performance. The S&P South Africa Sovereign Bond 1+ Year Index posted a 0.35% loss in December. This was driven by the ongoing demand for emerging market debt, where South African bonds continue to offer attractive yields compared to other global fixed-income assets. The strength of local government debt was also supported by foreign investor inflows, which were driven by the relative value in South Africa's bond market despite domestic challenges.

South Africa's bond market remains appealing to yield-seeking investors, particularly amid low interest rates in developed markets and a cautious global risk sentiment. Local bonds continue to benefit from higher yields, which remain a key draw for foreign investors looking for better returns in emerging markets.

Currency Movements

The South African Rand (ZAR) appreciated by 1.06% against the U.S. dollar in December, driven by a combination of factors, including the weaker dollar and a positive global sentiment towards emerging market assets. This slight strengthening of the Rand provided a counterbalance to the domestic challenges faced by the country, as the local currency gained ground against the greenback.
